ABSTRACTS

Corruption is a major problem in most countries especially developing ones and so through this research paper I am going to show how corruption affects and have been affecting the socio-economic sector through the deduction of previous research done. I am also going to give concrete and practical solutions to the problem of corruption in Kenya.

In Chapter One, there is the introduction of the research paper where it entails problem definition and a brief history and facts on the research problem. Apart from that, the chapter will indicate the purpose of the study, specifying the objectives and the expected results (hypotheses).

Chapter Two entails the literature review, both the theoretical and empirical literature review. In the theoretical part, devised theories, theoretical models from other research are shown while the empirical part covers facts and statistics as deduced from the ground and the corruption variables' impact on the economy.

Chapter Three entails the research methods and methodology. In it, types of data used, methods of data collection and their sources are explained. The mathematical model with its defined variables used for the research is also indicated.

Chapter Four shows the results gotten from the plotting of a linear regression using the data of the variables. The statistical variables from the results are also interpreted.

Chapter Five is the final part of the research whereby it covers on conclusion and recommendation. Conclusion derived from the research and practical recommendations is offered deduced from my research and other research.
